Update on the plans to reorganise paths near Hothfield church

Work and discussion between the parish council and the owner/operator of the new vineyard has carried on longer than expected. It has only become clear recently that the pandemic has caused problems at the rights of way department at Kent County Council, which have created much longer than usual queues, even for straightforward approvals. Modifications to proposed plans are being discussed to get an agreement as soon as possible. In the meantime, the only permitted route is via the kissing gates of AW116, through the wide avenue left clear of vines that traverses the two sections of vineyard. The Friends of Saint Margaret's, who are organising the Hothfield Walking Festival on 18 September, have been kept informed of the evolving situation.

Getting back to normal has been an amazing adventure for us all. Our scouts led the way with a weekend of camping and hiking. Wonderful fun and totally exhausting for all (especially the leaders). Every summer the cubs have an athletics competition. Last year Covid was the winner. This year we had a tie with two sharing the trophies. Everyone who tried their best won the athletes badge.

The weather has been kind to us so we've been able to do lots of outdoor scouting. This has meant a huge number of badges gained by our enthusiastic young people.

We are hoping that Covid settles over the summer so we can continue to meet all together when we return

HOTHFIELD HEATHLANDS IN AUGUST

Swathes of heather (Calluna vulgaris) and clumps of devil's-bit scabious (Succisa pratensis) bring new delight as the orchids and other early summer flowers set seed. July rain encouraged plenty of fungus, and sunshine enabled volunteer Rob Insall to record 200 banded demoiselles (Calopteryx splendens) on one day, along with marbled whites, large and small skippers, meadow browns, some ringlets and gatekeepers, as well as emperor dragonflies (Anax imperator) and broad-bodied chasers (Libellula depressa). Val Butcher also saw a keeled skimmer (Orthetrum coerulescens) and Ann Rowe spotted cinnamon moth caterpillars munching ragwort. Most of these damsel- and dragonflies will still be flying in good weather in August except perhaps the emperor. These lethal slivers of iridescence live for a few weeks or months at most, hunting insects, mating and defending their territory, while the equally predatory larvae that hatch from the eggs laid in water or on water plants can spend two years underwater, moulting several times as they grow. The final moult takes place out of the water as the adult slowly emerges, redistributing body fluid as the legs, wings and abdomen harden. The cast-off pupal skin can sometimes be found stuck to iris leaves or reed stems.

At rest, damselfly wings are folded parallel with the slender body, whereas dragonflies keep their four wings flat at right angles to the usually larger body. The emperor is Britain's largest dragonfly and hawkers are the fastest, reaching nearly 30 mph. The ability to move each wing independently means that dragonflies can fly backwards, forwards, sideways and hover. Their vision is panoramic thanks to huge compound eyes that spot prey up to 12 metres apart in any direction. The various raptors that patrol the reserve, including the kestrels and buzzards that Ann watched "having a barney" may have snapped up emerging (teneral) damsel- or dragonflies or caught the lighter damselflies thrown high by strong winds.

Fossils show that dragonflies with wingspans of 60cm were flying around 300 million years ago, before the dinosaurs appeared, and were one of the first types of insect on the planet. The modern mini versions can be seen not just by water where they mate and lay eggs, but across the open areas of the reserve where at night they will hide clinging to plants. So even a small area of water in a sunny spot in a garden will attract these high-energy colourful acrobats and their longer-lived larvae.

Devil's-bit scabious is a tall blue flower, the name of which refers to the root of the plant, which appears to be cut off, supposedly by the devil. The latin name for devil's-bit scabious is Succisa pratensis: succisa is Latin for cut off from below, pratensis is Latin for 'of meadows'. The name Scabious itself derives from the Latin scabere, to scratch, as the leaves were used to treat sores.

Common Darter (Ashford Warren)
© Ian Rickards

Calopteryx splendens is the latin name for Banded Demoiselle, and derives from the Greek for beautiful wing, while splendens is indeed Latin for splendid. The scientific naming of plants and animals is governed by international codes and committees; names for new and reorganised species have to have an accepted rationale. Dichelostemma ida-maia celebrates Ida-May Burke, the stagecoach driver's daughter who got the plant identified. The fern genus Gaga and two new species celebrate the fervent defence of equality and individual expression by Lady Gaga. An extinct species of wasp found in amber, Archaeoteleia astropulvis, is named after David Bowie, Star Dust translating into astropulvis. How heart-breaking that a new grasshopper found in Catalonia has been named Pycnogaster ribesiglesiasii to commemorate the conservation work of rangers Xavier Ribes Vilas and David Iglesias Díez, murdered in 2017 by a hunter discovered illegally shooting thrushes. The popular name for the new species, somereta de Davier, incorporates the men's names, David and Xavier. I can only echo the words of Llorenç Ricou, the head of the wildlife rangers in Lleida, that "for those who dedicate themselves to protecting the natural world, it's a lovely and symbolic act." But terrible that such a reason should ever be necessary.

Livestock checkers wanted:

Do you have the time to help us look after our conservation grazing animals? All the cattle, ponies and sheep at Hothfield Heathlands are checked on a daily basis, by a mixture of staff and volunteers. We currently have spaces in the rota, and are looking for new volunteers.

It is not an easy job; it can take two hours to find all the animals, searching through brambles and bracken over tricky terrain. We ask that people commit to the same day each week, ideally checking in the mornings (currently we have spaces on Tuesday, Thursday and Friday). You would need to have a smartphone, as we communicate with the team using Whatsapp (a very easy app which is free to download).

You do not need any previous experience, but you do need to be confident around big animals, and we will send you on an introductory training session before starting. If all of that hasn't put you off, please contact me. I can send you a registration form and we can get the ball rolling.

History Walks on 18 September

The Friends of Saint Margaret's Church are organising a number of walks in and around Hothfield on Saturday 18 September. There will be walks of different lengths covering different local topics, including two or three on Hothfield History. There will be a short walk around the remaining buildings of Hothfield Place, next to the church, including the site of the manor itself. Hopefully we'll include a few of the older buildings of the village nearby, and the vineyard. Former resident Andy Spicer also will describe his memories as a boy growing up in the village. Look out for publicity on the walks, and register your place on the walk of your choice. Refreshments and lunches will be available in the church during the day.

Did you know Owen and Margaret Hall at Kempton Manor?

Stuart McKellar e-mailed from Canberra, Australia, and ordered a copy of our publication "Hothfield in the 20th Century". Stuart has traced a family connection to Kempton Manor which was on the site of what is now the Holiday Inn and the Hop Pickers public house on the A20. Kempton Manor had previously been known as Cowlees while it was owned by a copper merchant, Chester Beatty, between 1934 and 1950.

Kempton Manor, or Cowlees, was one of the very few properties not previously owned by Lord Hothfield. The Westwell/Hothfield boundary used to run across the 'Common' (as it was then) which meant that Cowlees was in the parish of Westwell for most of its existence. Sadly, therefore, Rev. Russell's extensive research on the parish of Hothfield makes only one passing reference to Cowlees.

During WWII Kempton Manor was commandeered by the army, along with all the big houses and farms in the area. The REME were based at Kempton Manor, and you can read more about their time there on our website: www.hothfieldmemories.org.uk (see John Wilkinson's story). When the Holiday Inn was built in 1990 they named a restaurant 'Kempton's' in honour of the previous manor which burned down.

Past residents of Hothfield recall that the Manor had a swimming pool on the western side, which the public were allowed to use for a modest fee. Sadly, we know very little about the Manor, and we don't have any pictures. If anyone has any information on the Manor, we'd love to see it.

Stuart wrote: 'It seems my Grand-Uncle, Owen Moore Hall, died at Kempton Manor Hothfield suddenly 10th November 1953. He may have been the proprietor, but I'm not sure as a news article says that a Mr A Kempe Roberts was the proprietor. Would anyone have any more information or photos relating to the pub and Owen Hall and partner Margaret from that time? Owen was last in Melbourne Australia in 1937, and never returned, spending his remaining time in Kent, firstly in Folkestone in the ARP ambulances in 1939, then at various parts of the Kent countryside - Hotel Celeste in Molash, then 'White Ladies' Harrietsham, then Hill House Lenham, and finally Kempton Manor Hotel. He was a solicitor, so perhaps some real estate work, I don't really know.

I believe Margaret moved on to Whitstable at some point around 1953. I've found, via a very helpful Ashford Cemetery's team, that Owen is buried in Bybrook Cemetery there, and no sign of Margaret. His profession is recorded as 'hotel proprietor'. We believe that he had a mental illness, and I would really appreciate any info that would help me understand his issues a little better.'

If any past residents of Hothfield from the late 1940s or early '50s can remember anything about Kempton Manor, or Owen and Margaret, then please e-mail me at: hothfieldmemories@hotmail.com or leave a comment on our website.
