Sports pavilion building

We have launched a survey to establish how people use the site, identify what its most valued assets are and look at ways to improve it.

The ambition is to create short-, medium-, and long-term plans which reflect the Council's and users' priorities. We will reflect upon the current management approach of the site to establish areas for improvement or enhancement. It is essential to highlight that these plans do not have associated funding, or any predetermined outcomes.

Local schools learning about our nature reserves

Over the last couple of months the TVBC countryside team have been busy hosting school visits for children across the borough. Nearly 500 pupils from eight local primary schools got involved with pond and river dipping.

During this time we are able to get a glimpse of the variety of invertebrates on our reserves with some exciting finds such as Water scorpions and Dragonfly nymphs. Conducting these school visits gives us the chance to educate local school children about the nature reserves around them along with the habitats and species within.

Planning Matters

Michael Gove reveals new planning reforms

Levelling Up Secretary Michael Gove has set out plans for reforms of planning regulations, telling the Sunday Telegraph that changes to permitted development rights will be used to encourage the conversion of shops, offices, takeaways and betting shops into new homes without the need for planning permission, and that councils are to be invited to bid to set up Government-sponsored development corporations with the power to use compulsory purchase orders to buy land and sell part of it to developers for new housing. While Britain needs more homes, Mr Gove said, "they must be of the right type and targeted in the right places", which means "we must build more in the places that make sense – in our inner cities so that we protect our countryside", while making "better use of the buildings we already have – empty shops or offices cannot be gathering dust while we have an urgent need for more homes". Mr Gove also signalled the relaxation of rules requiring landlords to improve the energy efficiency of the properties they rent out.
